However, it has been believed that Walker could bold this off until after the 1976 election.
An override of the school fund

substaptial outside financial participation that has been arranged.

Since time has become such a crucial factor, it will be important that all families who have so far failed to grant easements do so now. If they do not, lines may have to bypass not only their property but that of neighbors, resulting in some not being able to obtain sanitary sewer service.

It also is vital that the sponsoring gover-

The task of developing adequate financing has been intricate. Now that it has been accomplished, there must be no turning back from the timetable and its Dec. 31 bid award deadline.

Recommendations given to help avoid future Watergates

Recommendations given to he

The final report of the Watergate
Special Prosecution Force provides food for thought by citing some of the circircumstances and actions that led America to the brink of crisis, in 1972-74, jeopardizing the continued functioning of our democratic processes:

1. Criminal abuse of power-by government officials in high places.

2. Historical growth 50 secreey in the federal executive branch unchecked by Americans and their elected Congress.

3. Unchallenged subjective judgments to the executive branch in identifying persons and organizations that constitute an impermissible threat to the national interest and to executive policy.

4. An undemocratic condition wherein money is power and skillful, cynical public relations cogments that power.

5. A conclusion by some government representatives that ethical standards are irrelevant because quick implementation of policy goals is mandatory—but

The report emphasizes that democracies do not survive unless elected officials do what they are supposed to do and citizens maintain vigilance to see that they do."

It adds that "the public uncluding of Watergate abuses resulted from citizen, press and official actions.
"Nothing can replace that kind of vigilance, and recommendations for new laws or new institutions are insignificant when compared to the stubborn, plodding, daily work of Americans and their elected representatives in watching over and channeling the power of their national government."

ment."

Specific proposals to help prevent future "Watergates" include Senate rejection of any future U.S. attorney general nominee who has been the President's campaign manager; creation of a special Justice Department unit, similar to that focused on organized crime, to combat government crime; and adoption of a constitutional amendment clarifying whether an incumbent President can be indicated.

A final protective step being proposed is action by Congress to create another temporary special prosecutor if the need

temporary special prosecutor if the need arises again.

A permanent position of this type is being discouraged because an independent prosecutor is immune from accountability and himself could become involved in abuse of power—and with little chance of detection.

Uncertainty on Pontoon water bills

To the Editor:
We receive our water bills each month at Pontons Beach without the previous and present reading on them—just the amount and gallons used, which is estimated for two months. The third month is overcharged or undercharge on the two previous bills. In other words, the Water District says it reads the meters every three months. Several neighbors say their meters of the previous bills. I feel that if the district has a meter man, why can't he read these meters every month and put the readings on the bills, or give the readings on the bills, or give the readings on the bills, or give the readings of the readings.
